

NARROW ESCAPE.

On Friday morning when Martin Run was a raging torrent from the heavy rains, three little children of Carl Slavin attempted to cross a foot bridge. Hazel, aged four, fell in, and Robert, aged six, and Earl, aged ten, went in to rescue her. The children were washed over and over down several yards but the boys managed to pull their little sister to one bank. The father saw them, but the swift waters and rolling stones were almost too much for him. It is a wonder that all three children were not drowned.—Times.
